Frequency analysis of QRS morphology in cases of infarction in left ventricular anteroseptal territory as compared to lateral wall infarction. A large-scale, long-term QRS morphology analysis in cases of acute coronary syndrome has not been reported. We investigated the frequency of ventricular fibrillation or sustained ventricular tachycardia during acute coronary syndrome with QRS morphology of left ventricular (LV) anteroseptal (aAS) and lateral (lAS) infarction using automated event recorders. QRS morphology was visually inspected in retrospect to determine whether an episode of sustained ventricular tachycardia or ventricular fibrillation had occurred in each patient. The aAS group consisted of 50 patients (63.3 ± 8.0 years, 52% male) and the lAS group consisted of 50 patients (61.2 ± 8.2 years, 45% male). Thirty-five patients in the aAS group had inferior myocardial infarction, but a significantly greater proportion of patients in the lAS group had anterior myocardial infarction (78 vs. 60%, $P = 0.01$). Compared to the lAS group, a significantly greater proportion of patients in the aAS group had sustained ventricular tachycardia or ventricular fibrillation (30 vs. 10%, P Available Designs Luxury Hotels Top Brands About Luxury Hotels Luxury Hotels is your go-to resource for the most trusted and superior Luxury Hotels. List of drone strikes conducted by the CIA The United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) conducts drone strikes in specific countries against alleged terrorists, militant extremists or foreign forces considered to have a high threat of engaging in acts of terrorism. The term "targeted killing" is often used by the U.S. government to refer to drone strike operations; all but one of the U.S. drone strikes were conducted by the CIA. History The CIA has operated armed drones since the mid-1960s, long before the current drone policy and before the program became publicly known. In 2010, the CIA began reworking its drone campaign to involve electronic surveillance. By 2012, the CIA was conducting aerial drone strikes in Pakistan, using Predator drones. A total of 157 strikes took place between 2004 and 2013 in Pakistan, Afghanistan, Yemen and Somalia. The estimated total number of non-combatant deaths is unclear. The total number of civilian and militant deaths is approximately 400 and is estimated by the Bureau of Investigative Journalism. As of early 2014, the United States does not publicly acknowledge conducting drone strikes in any country. A U.S. government spokesperson has explained the rationale behind this stance as: There was a wave of drone strikes in Pakistan during 2011 and 2012. U.S. officials cited the Al-Qaeda prison camps in eastern Libya, sometimes called "the Benghazi ready-made prison", as justification for the strikes, in particular a CIA drone strike on a house in December 2011, which killed Anas al-Liby, a Libyan al-Qaeda leader. In 2012, President Barack Obama said the U.S. would probably not publicly discuss drone strikes: A new policy was announced in 2013, saying the CIA would not conduct drone strikes outside of the U.S. and those that are conducted would be authorized by the president. Activities In 2016, a former drone pilot said that the CIA operated two drone fleets, one in the eastern U.S. that targets terrorists in Afghanistan and Pakistan. Another, carrying out strikes in Yemen, was based at a base in Saudi Arabia. In 2007, the US president declared a "Global War on Terror" and the total number of US citizens targeted by drone strikes increased. Among those targeted were Nazih Abdul-Hamed al-Ruqai, a Palestinian militant who was accused of directing suicide bombings in Israel and multiple US citizens. In 2015, a former CIA drone pilot said that drones were used
